Scar Tissue By Judith Cutler

Caffy Tyler believes she has well and truly left her old life behind her, in spite of her emotional and physical scars. Living in rural Kent, with a new job and new friends, she feels safe, and -- for the first time in her life -- happy. However a series of troubling events bring this brief feeling of contentment to a sharp halt. The combination of seeing a dead body through the window of a house she is painting, and then running into her drug-dealer ex-boyfriend shopping in her local supermarket throw Caffy's life into disarray.

Forced to assume a new identity, she discovers that there are more bizarre things going on than she had originally thought. Not only did the body she saw mysteriously disappear, but the police are being seriously unhelpful and, on top of that, she keeps seeing strangers wandering around the marsh in the middle of the night. Can it all be connected? Caffy needs to know who to trust. The man she once loved is now a police officer and seems unable (or perhaps that's just unwilling?) to help her. And she beings to wonder if her new friends are as reliable as they seem. . .

Editorial Review

Review
"Cutler avoids pat solutions and keeps the reader constantly off balance.Nothing ever happens as expected, and it is difficult to put the book down.Cutler has already written two excellent series, but she has excelled herself with Scar Tissue." Rating A -- Deadly Pleasures Magazine

About the Author
Prize-winning short-story writer Judith Cutler is the author of two acclaimed series of crime novels set in Birmingham. The Dying series features amateur sleuth Sophie Rivers, while in her police procedural series Inspector Kate Power lives up to her name. One-time Secretary of the Crime Writers' Association, Judith has taught Creative Writing at Birmingham University, and has run occasional writing courses elsewhere. Now a full-time writer, she lives near Canterbury with husband and crime-writer Edward Marston.
