How To Build An Underground Shelter By Henry Hart

In uncertain times, or even in times when everything seems calm and peaceful most people don't think about underground survival shelters but there is always the chance that some type of long term catastrophe could occur. This is not to say that people need to go around worrying about what will happen in the next minute, hour or day, but it does mean that individuals and families should seriously think about how they could survive if something dramatic and life changing was to occur and an underground shelter greatly improves chances of survival.

There are several situations where people will definitely benefit from having some type of long term underground or above ground safe shelter. In reality building a secure above ground shelter is beyond most family's financial ability, and this is certainly not an area where you want to cut costs.

Using the natural protection of the earth itself can dramatically cut down on the price and decrease many of the issues that above ground shelters will continue to experience both when in use and when not in use.

Since you hope you won't have to use your underground shelter or panic room, keeping costs down but security and protection up is a huge factor in building underground survival shelters.
